Not being a wise ass (for once) But have you ever caught a fish and had it spit up a baby smallmouth? I got about 12 colors of jerk baits and I wind up going back to the same three patterns.

I have had them spit up baby turtles and a mouse.

But I don't throw top water turtles.

I know what you're saying, but I think it looks like a yellow perch. It can't hurt. I'll give it a try between senkos.;

.....so what are the three patterns that you think work?
That is if you are really being serious! :unsure: :dry:

BTW- They are not suppose to be smallmouth. They are suppose to CATCH smallmouth.

The add doesn't state that they are baby smallies.

oh yeah.....BITCH!

good color on any smallmouth lake when it's cold....

IMO
a big smallie has a very small window when it's cold and is less likely to "move" for schooling bait.

they'd rather move for 1 substancial meal than pick off baitfish from a school.

late fall when the perch push back up, they'll stay in 5-15 fow until after the spawn, which makes them a "key" bait for big smallies.

look for them to slide up in the shallows right after ice out during warming trends.

just my $1.380.....bitches B)

Chris,
I don't know what they look like to you but to me they look more like Perch than Smallies!
I think the clarity of the water has more to do with what the Bass see than the pattern on the bait does.
That particular bait is a darker color for clear to slightly stained water on an overcast day.
Of course that is just my opinion albeit on the money! :dry:
Bitch!
